SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN

KIEL MUSEUM

On September 9th, 2023 the Kieler Kunsthalle closed the doors, then was cleared out. Kunsthalle Director Anette Hüsck: "But we will also perform in the city at different locations again and again. As an idea, the Kunsthalle will not close for the next few years." Exhibitions of the Kiel Kunsthalle will therefore continue, just not in the Kunsthalle, but outside.

MUSEUMSINSEL SCHLOSS GOTTORF

"Schloss der Walküren": Joana Vasconcelos at Schloss Gottorf

May 1st - November 3rd 2024

The Portuguese artist Joana Vasconcelos transforms Gottorf Castle into a brightly coloured "Valkyrie Castle" with gigantic installations. It is a tribute to her homeland, but also to militant women. In Schleswig, Vasconcelo's works not only feature the special exhibition areas in the riding hall and the cross stable, but also interact with the historical collection in the palace halls.

Finally, in the Gottorf Castle Chapel, the "Valkyrie Thyra" megasculpture, unsurpassed in its abundance of noble fabrics and ornamental details, leads an exciting dialogue with the rich, wood-carved furnishings of the sacred space. Hanging on a steel truss, the Valkyrie floats like a church angel in the chapel built in 1590, where the Danish community of Schleswig celebrates monthly services. Thyra Danebod (880 - 935) played an important role in the history of Scandinavia: through her marriage to the Viking leader Gorm, she became Queen of Jutland and, as the mother of the later ruler Harald Blauzahn, the ancestor of the ruling Danish monarch. Harald, who united Denmark under a crown for the first time, died of a wound he had sustained in a naval battle - and was undoubtedly accompanied by the Valkyries to Valhalla.

„PHOTOGRAPHY ART – ICONS OF PHOTOGRAPHIC ART“

Icons of photography: just a mirror of the times? How does this particular meaning arise, why do certain photographs become so famous? Why are they put on book - or magazine covers? And why is this one motif on the cover or posted on social media platforms?

These and other questions are addressed by Ingrid Roosen-Trinks, collector and board member of the association KUNST FÜR ANGELN e.V., and Timm Vollert, curator and member of the German Photography Society, in the exhibition "Photography Art - Icons of Photo Art" from October 13 to November 10, 2024.

Kunst für Angeln offers the only private art collection in the north of Schleswig-Holstein, which is open to the public - AND additionally the CHILDREN'S ART CLUB ANGELN - The only museum in SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN, in which exclusively art of children between 3 and 14 years is shown.

MUSEUMBERG FLENSBURG

from December 9th, 2023 to December 1st, 2026

“Favorite pieces!”

The Kunsthalle zu Kiel as a guest at the Museumsberg Flensburg

A dozen hand-picked masterpieces from the Kiel Picture Collection are guests at the Museumsberg Flensburg, while the Kunsthalle in Kiel is being fundamentally renovated. "Favorite pieces!" is the presentation of the valuable loans titled, and this is no coincidence. Museum director Michael Fuhr was happy to choose his favorites from the wonderful Kiel collection.

For the next five years, precious works by painters such as Emil Nolde, Karl Schmidt-Rottluff and Asger Jorn have now taken their place between the paintings of the Flensburg collection. The spectrum ranges from Dutch Baroque still lifes to portraits and landscapes of the 19th century, to icons of classical modernism.

All twelve loans are hung in such a way that they enter into dialogue with the Flensburg collection and thus open up new connections for the visitors. For the circular painting "The Hermit" by Albert Aereboe, we even renovated an entire room.

Wegners plads 1 - DK-6270 Tønder

The art collection focuses on North European art from 1900 to the present day.

The museum boasts a large and extraordinary collection of Danish Surrealism including seminal works by Wilhelm Freddie, Vilhelm Bjerke Petersen and Rita Kernn-Larsen, and important works by early Danish modernists.

H.J. Wegner (1914-2007) was an icon of international design. He was born and served his apprenticeship as a cabinetmaker in Tønder. At the exhibition in the Water Tower, you can see and sit on chairs that Wegner considered his own best works. You can also learn about Wegner, his background, life history and sources of inspiration.

ESBJERG/ Jütland

Permanent exhibition/ Sculptures:
Man by the water/ The four white men.

In 1995, Esbjerg municipality celebrated its 100th anniversary. On the occasion of this anniversary, the sculpture called The Man on the Water was created. The sculpture was placed just north of Esbjerg, more precisely on Sædding Beach, and is located directly opposite the fishing and maritime museum, which is also an exciting tourist attraction of the area.

The 9-meter-high sculpture is made up of a row of four white concrete men looking out over the water. This is why the sculpture is often known as the "Four White Men". The man behind the unique sculpture is the visual artist Svend Wiig Hansen, who was trained at the Royal Danish Art Academy (Det Kongelige Danske Kunstakademi). He was also at the forefront of the extensive casting work that was going on right on the beach. The artist has personally expressed that the meaning of sculpture is to symbolize the pure encounter between man and nature and, not least, the encounter between civilization and the sea. Today the sculpture is a landmark of Esbjerg and it is a highly appreciated and popular tourist attraction that is undoubtedly worth a visit if you are nearby.

About the museum:

WHITE EXPOSED CONCRETE WITH TEXTILE STRUCTURE

Located in the middle of nowhere on the Danish peninsula of Jutland, it was hardly worth visiting the city of Herning.

This has changed with the opening of the Herning Museum of Contemporary Art Herning, or Heart for short. The museum building designed by Steven Holl Architects is located on the site of a former textile factory. It is also thanks to its owner Aage Damgaard that the construction could be realized. The shirt manufacturer, art lover and patron not only collected, but also hired artists such as Robert Jacobsen, Sven Dalsgaard and the Italian painter Piero Manzoni, who created large-format works in the workshops of the factory against a fixed salary. However, the rooms did not offer suitable exhibition opportunities, so in 2005 a competition was held, which was won by the Norwegian-born American Holl. In his museum design, the architect was guided by the landscape and the history of the place. From the idea of a box over which a stretched shirt is thrown, a building complex of around 5,600 m² has emerged, whose roof geometry appears from above like intertwined shirt sleeves. These are spread over the two single-storey exhibition rooms: one houses the permanent exhibition, the other offers space for temporary exhibitions. The foyer, offices, a concert hall, a library, a café-restaurant and an open-air stage are grouped around it.

The dynamics of the white concrete structure continue in the outer space: Downwards it is reflected in large water basins, upwards its curved roof shapes with large protrusions merge into elongated grass hills. The impression is created that the building and the landscape merge. The roof surfaces are curved inwards and are reminiscent of fabric sails that sag downwards into the room. This elaborate construction was made possible by steel trusses. Large skylights made of profiled glass in the individual roof segments provide the exhibition rooms with plenty of natural daylight. They are equipped with a translucent thermal insulation made of plastic, which diffuses the light softly into the exhibition rooms. The same glazing was also used in the exterior facade of the museum. In the foyer and restaurant, on the other hand, transparent glass surfaces create the reference to the outside. The architectural idea of the textile can be found not only in the floor plan, but also on the facade of the building. It shows a moving structure reminiscent of wrinkled fabric. Of course, this refers to the shirt factory, but also to the famous white canvases of the artist Manzoni. The museum has 3 to 4 special exhibitions per year, which can be classified into one of the following three exhibition categories in its strategy: HEARThistory, HEARTfuture and

HEARTdesign.

Opening hours: daily - except Mondays - from 10am to 4pm.

SKOVSTNOGEN - DEEP FOREST ARTLAND

Well hidden in a forest in West Jutland you will find this art museum without walls and under the open sky. The "Museum" is a surreal nature walk between the tree and more or less permanent installations. The place is named after the first work of art listed here, a huge yellow wooden snake that you can crawl through. Since then, only a few works of art have been added and today the museum has over 80 installations. Skovsnogen – deep forest artland was established in 2009 by the visual artists Søren Taaning and René Schmidt and has since grown into an extraordinary attraction with many different projects. Professor Martin Erik Andersen from the Danish School of Sculpture at the Copenhagen Academy of Fine Arts says the following about Skovsnogen: "It is the best contemporary project dealing with contemporary art and the public."

H.C.ANDERSENS HOUSE

The museum gives you the opportunity to get to know Hans Christian Andersen's work from a new perspective. The emphasis is not on the person Andersen and his story, but on the fairy tales he wrote and their voices. The museum does not talk ABOUT Hans Christian Andersen, but WITH Hans Christian Andersen. You can listen to the audio guide in Danish, English and German. The museum building itself covers an area of 5,600 square meters and has a children's house and an underground museum intertwined with a surrounding magical garden. The small yellow corner house, formerly known as the birthplace of Hans Christian Andersen, is also part of the experience. The ambitious museum building was designed by the Japanese star architect Kengo Kuma and realized with a decisive donation from the AP Møller Foundation.

Kengo Kuma and his studio are also responsible for the new Olympic Stadium in Tokyo. The content was created in collaboration with 12 renowned artists from Denmark and abroad who have jointly created an exhibition in which architecture, art, design, sound, light and images enable an encounter with Andersen through his works.

Artists include Brazilian installation artist Henrique Oliveira, British doll maker Andy Gent, award-winning Danish author Kim Fupz, and American Daniel Handler - better known under his pseudonym Lemony Snicket - and many more.

Kunstforeningen GL Strand is located on the beautiful street "Gammel Strand", from where it got its name. In 1825, the organization "Kunstforeningen (The Art Society)" was founded with the aim of making knowledge about art accessible to more people. In 1952 the institution moved into the historic building on the Slotsholmen Canal. Today it hosts six to eight exhibitions a year, spread over several floors. A coffee in the cozy garden of the house is highly recommended after the extensive art experience!

Speaking of historical buildings: The Nikolaj Contemporary Art Center is located in a church, namely St. Nicholas, who you recognize by her elongated copper tower. The external appearance is hard to imagine that important works of contemporary art can be found here. The Nikolaj Contemporary Art Center has been hosting its exhibitions here since the 1950s and also shows international art makers alongside Danish artists.

In the middle of the Meatpacking District lies the Fotografisk Center in the former warehouse, young, contemporary photography from Denmark is shown. Fans of photography definitely get their money's worth with the changing program. Right next door you can fortify yourself in a small café and watch young Danes in the local gym doing sports. Exciting exhibition spaces, for example Hans & Fritz Contemporary.

I admit that the Copenhagen Contemporary Gallery is not exactly on the usual route - but the trip to Refshaleøen Island is even more worthwhile: The location is a former welding plant, over 7000 square meters of exhibition space!

SPECIAL TIP: Right next door, Refshalevej 173 C, is Copenhagen's hottest restaurant. 2 Star chef Rasmus Munk offers in his ALCHEMIST a food experience in a class of its own. The most creative thing is for sure!

The cisterns, in Danish called Cisternerne, are water reservoirs built in the middle of the 19th century, which lie underground. After being unused for a long time, they can now be visited. And not only that: the underground vaults show exciting positions of contemporary art. The atmosphere makes this place really a special experience!

Maria Prymachenko and works from the Moderna Museet Collection

21 September 2024 – 30 March 2025

Maria Prymachenko (1909–1997) is one of Ukraine’s best-known and most beloved artists. Her motifs have appeared on postage stamps, and a planetoid has been named after her. The stylized yet playful patterns have their roots in folk embroidery and traditional craftsmanship.

In the exhibition, Maria Prymachenko’s paintings are displayed alongside works from the Moderna Museet’s 20th-century collection and pieces by two contemporary artists, Runo Lagomarsino and Susanna Marcus Jablonski.

Artists such as Marc Chagall, Egon Möller-Nielsen, Niki de Saint Phalle, Lou Laurin-Lam, and Pablo Picasso enhance the presence of myth, metamorphosis, and storytelling. Together, these works form a vibrant elegy.

NORWAY

OSLO

NATIONALMUSEUM:

Edvard Munch devoted himself to the very big themes: he painted goodbyes, despair, death, the dying and those who remain in mourning. Naked, vulnerable figures, abandoned and those who remain lonely in society. He expressed feelings for which man is often ashamed, which he likes to repress. But the Norwegian artist (1863-1944) captured everything in images bearing titles such as "fear", "melancholy" and "jealousy". This made him world famous. As a spectator, one is surprised: Comfort, which can be experienced in the new National Museum in Oslo. There, the Norwegians dedicated a room to their Munch in which 18 of his works hang, including the most famous: "The Cry". In 2012, a version of the image was auctioned for $119.9 million. A sum that had never been paid for a painting at an auction before. The National Museum itself is now the largest art museum in Northern Europe. Opened in June 2022, it makes Oslo an exciting cultural metropolis. It is not the only new building of recent times: it was not until October 2021 that the new Munch Museum welcomed the first guests, a bold building directly opposite the white opera house, which seems to float like an iceberg in the Oslofjord. In 2020, the Deichman Library was built. It was the opera house that started the upgrading of the Børvika harbour district in 2008. A lot has happened since then: The promenade by the water is now nine kilometers long and Oslo can be easily explored on foot. If you stay in the centre near the Karl-Johans-Prachtstrasse and the main station, you can walk in any direction.

Down to the water and past the fortress Akershus, up to the Ekebergpark (worth seeing sculpture park!!). Or along the river Akerselva, from the fjord up to the nightlife district Grünerløkka with its cafes, restaurants and bars. If you go outside again, you can get in Aker Brygge directly on the water in one of the outdoor restaurants. Or continue to the Astrup Fearnley Museum of Modern Art, a building by Renzo Piano. International contemporary art is shown there, in regularly changing exhibitions. Stars like Damien Hirst can be found as well as artists who are probably unknown to the general public. In the water in front of the opera house rises the installation "She Lies" by Monica Bonvicini, an interpretation of Caspar David Friedrich's painting "The Ice Sea". And in front of the Munch Museum a huge bronze statue of the British artist Tracey Emin rises into the sky. Finally, the new Munch Museum should not be missed. If you ask the Norwegians in Oslo what they think of the building, you hear a lot of ridicule. "I like Munch, but I don't like the museum at all," says an architect. The building has reminded some of guardrails piled on top of each other, but again, it depends on the inner values. The industrious Munch left Oslo with more than 26,000 pictures and drawings. There are also 900 works donated by a close friend of the artist, and the museum dedicates seven of the 13 floors to art. Munch left not only paintings, but also drawings, prints, paper works, sculptures and photographs. The main exhibition is divided into twelve thematic areas.

His stone sculpture stands in Bod, with which he wants to point out the reckless use of natural materials by man. Pauline Curnier Jardin

Open from October 11th 2024 to February 2nd 2026

French artist Pauline Curnier Jardin's exhibition transforms Kiasma's exhibition space into a grotesque theme park. The film works that await us in its depths offer glimpses into the fate of women and others marginalised in various ways in "entertainment" and as objects of power.

The films in the exhibition deal with gender norms, power and violence, for example, through historical events, the carnality associated with the Catholic Faith, and the experience industry with its emphasis on romance. They show the power relations in society in a garish, sometimes comical, light. The female body is presented as object of power, but women also subvert and wield power.
